Effects of Age on Detection of Emotional Information

Suzy Lynn Queue

Lee College
The Effects of Age on Detection of Emotional Information

Introductory information begins here. There is no need to title this section as “introduction” because that is obvious. A brief history, definition of the situation, and other aspects required by your instructor goes here.

Discussion

Heading

Each paragraph in the section should begin with a topic sentence that is directly related to your research topic. Next, make sure that the sentences in the paragraph are directly related to the topic sentence.

Be sure and use transition words between paragraphs for smooth reading. Transition words such as the following: For example . . . , Consider the case of . . . , To demonstrate . . . , For instance . . . , To illustrate . . . , Finally . . . , are among many examples of transitions.

Heading

Check your assignment page to be sure all the information required by your instructor is included in this section. Remember that your “References” page needs to be the very last page.

Conclusion

Concluding thoughts can go here.
References

If the nursing handbook instructions guide you to analyze information at a particular web site, you must cite the original web site and not the handbook.